THE BIGGEST HOLIDAY NOVELS

RALPH CONNOR

THE PATROL OF THE SUN DANCE TRAIL

The biggest, bravest book by the author of THE SKY PILOT.

"Connor has caught the spirit of the pioneer breed. He is at his best in such writing as his account of the house-raising bee. . . . He has caught the spirit of the wide empty places, the majesty of the rolling prairies, the beauty of the frontier that holds men under its spell. . . . . For all that, THE PATROL OF THE SUN DANCE TRAIL is a story of action, of crowding incident. It can hardly fail to hold the interest of the reader to the end." —Boston Transcript.

MARIE CORELLI

INNOCENT: Her Fancy and His Fact

"A beautiful and tender love-story. The writer's personality, so remarkable and so full of life, is everywhere in evidence, and her great gift of picturesque and enthralling narrative was never used to better purpose. Miss Corelli has kept a high aim in life, and a power almost unequaled of throwing herself into whatever work she undertakes. Her rich and vivid imagination has given us many pages glowing with scarlet and purple. . . . . With consummate skill, the whole heart of a woman is shown to us. . . . . INNOCENT IS ONE OF THE HEROINES THAT WILL NEVER BE FORGOTTEN." —W. Robertson Nicoll.

The GREEN CURVE

What It Is About

¶ A SOLDIER'S WAR TALES, these, originally written for soldiers. Tales of the tragic commonplaces of war. Grim tales, some of them—no reader can forget that one of the General commanding a besieged town, who is confronted with the choice of turning out the women and children and aged to die, or of losing the city by starvation; or that dramatic story "The Kite," in which the war-kites changed a formidable attack into a massacre.

¶ THERE IS an occasional humorous story—how the men outwitted their quartermaster in "When Dog Eats Dog," and other tales of the lighter side of campaigning.

¶ COLONEL SWINTON understands modern methods of warfare as do few others, for he has seen active service in the Colonies and in South Africa. That he knows how to write in a vivid, convincing style and with real literary skill, every reader of the "Eyewitness" dispatches will agree.

"As powerful a series of military sketches as we remember to have seen."—London Morning Leader.

"Good literary art does not always run in harness with a clear dramatic sense; both are often far enough removed from accurate scientific knowledge. 'The Green Curve' gives us all three; and the equipment is complete."—The London Globe.

"Ole Luk-oie's pen bites, and his crisp power of narrative is delightful."—Illustrated London News.

"The author of these stories not only knows the paraphernalia of war, but he can write. It is this combination of exact military knowledge and literary skill that give the stories their character."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"They are infused with originality, they are cleverly written, and in places shrewdly convincing, and one derives from them a vivid impression. Humor is not absent from them, but the strongest are those that grip the dread business of battle."—Dundee Advertiser.

"Make this a Book Christmas"

AN OPEN LETTER

To the Trade:

As you know, it has been the experience of the most active booksellers that a year of business depression is often a good book selling year, and I believe we have an unusual opportunity for the coming holidays to make this a book Christmas. This can only be done by special and more or less combined effort to turn the thoughts of possible readers into book channels, and by not devoting one's entire time to the easiest books to sell, which are, perhaps, the prevalent war literature. The other serious books and current fiction can be sold when the purchaser comes in to get a war book.

I understand that the Publishers' Co-operative Bureau is eager to adopt the advertising phrase, "Make this a Book Christmas," and there is no doubt that its constant reiteration will make an impression upon people's minds which will result in great benefit to all booksellers and publishers.

I am taking the liberty of emphasizing the particular fitness of book-gifts this year in the hope that you will co-operate in a plan that has already taken on national proportions to make 1914 a most successful Book Christmas.

Very truly yours,

F. N. DOUBLEDAY,

"The Way of the Strong" Has Made Good!

"THE Way of the Strong" by Ridgwell Cullum has justified the confidence of America's leading book-sellers. Since its publication on October 10th, a sincere effort has been made to advertise it and ell it wholly upon its merit. We manufactured a product which we considered good. We told the public why we considered it good. They agreed with us. So did the book-sellers. We are continuing our advertising in the leading newspapers. For December we have taken large space in Everybody's, Harper's, Scribner's, World's Work, Current Opinion and Literary Digest. The sales of this book have been steadily increasing. Instead of relaxing when we found it moving well, we have doubled our energies. What "The Way of the Strong" did in October and November, it will continue to do in December. John Wanamaker, Gimbel Bros. and Hochschild-Kohn Co. of Baltimore are representative of the prominent book-sellers who re-ordered within ten days after publication. "The Way of the Strong" has made good. And it is a book which will sell as well a year from now as it is selling today. It should be one of your most profitable holiday sellers. COPYRIGHT IN TIMES OF WAR.

IT was Cicero who phrased the dictum "inter arma leges silent" and Treitschke, the professional prophet of German militarism, nearly two thousand years later, says "as soon as hostilities have actually begun all treaties between the two States come legally to an end," but there are treaties and treaties—treaties political, treaties commercial, treaties administrative. It is of political treaties that this really holds true, also of commercial treaties to the extent that they are affected by war conditions. But as to administrative treaties, particularly where these have taken the larger form of mutual conventions between several powers, some of them to-day belligerent, some of them neutral, there is a larger view, and happily there is general and international protest against the breaking down of such treaties and conventions even by belligerents as against each other. In this category come copyright treaties and the conventions which have resulted in the Union International for the protection of literary and artistic property.

This Union is one of several, centering mostly in Berne, happily in a neutral country, preservative of those rights of peace which must continue throughout and after the war. Through trains are no longer run across the border between Switzerland and the belligerent countries, but the International Railway Convention not only continues in present application, but must be of extreme and immediate importance as soon as the war has ceased. These international conventions are in the nature of general agreements which cannot be abrogated by the belligerents without violation of the rights and interests of neutral nations. The same holds true of the Copyright Convention and of copyright treaties, with the further consideration that the relations under copyright conventions are not between nations but between individuals and concern the rights of private property, oftentime private property rights between subjects of the same belligerent. Thus, if a copyright originating from German authorship has been sold in Great Britain for British publication, it is the British owner of the copyright who would be wronged if Great Britain should take the view that German copyrights are no longer to be protected. The world has been sufficiently upset, as between nations, without doing the greater wrong of upsetting the relations between private individuals on which the future rehabilitation of the nations must be based.

We reprint, in view of the importance of this subject, an editorial article from Droit d'Auteur which admirably discusses this problem and comes to the like conclusion. We have already referred to the protest in the English publishing trade against the possibility of an opposite course. The question could arise in one of two ways, either by abrogation of copyright by Great Britain or Germany, we will say, in respect to copyrights arising in the other country, either formally or by application of the dictum first cited; or secondly by the piracy on the part of one publisher of a copyrighted work by an author who is a subject of the enemy, and his defense in the course of a suit for infringement by the plea that copyright treaties or conventions fall with political treaties or conventions in time of war. This would indeed be a hazardous course and would, we believe, be met by the courts with the right answer. In our opinion there should not be the slightest question but that copyrights and patents and other property should be protected throughout belligerent nations as completely as things would be protected against individual theft. To cite again the case of the historic umbrella, so often made an analogy in copyright debate, it should be no more possible for a British subject to steal a German copyright than it would be for a Britisher to possess himself of an umbrella because it belonged to a German "enemy."

Happily America is not immediately concerned in this question, though the violation of copyright conventions might have an indirect effect. Unfortunately America is not a party to the Copyright Convention, so that in this respect it has no right to speak as one concerned, but on the other hand America, as the great neutral power, has a special responsibility in doing all that it can to protect the larger interests involved in the present contest. It should speak with no uncertain voice.

SOME two months ago, soon after the war broke out, under the caption "Some War Opportunities Being Lost," the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY took occasion to call attention editorially to three specific instances of books which it felt were not receiving the exploitation which their timeliness and excellence deserved. One of them, Bernhardi's book, has since become a best seller. Of one of them, a book of fiction, the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY said: "It calls to mind the comment of a group of West Point engineer officers—'the best stories of war ever written.' Insert the word 'modern' before 'war,' and the writer agrees with them. . . . The general public . . . would clamor for this book if they knew of it, it is so vivid, so vital, so infused with accurate knowledge of war to-day." We are much interested to learn this week that Doubleday, Page & Company, the publishers of the book in question, "The Green Curve," are calling attention to a new edition of it, to which they are planning to give considerable publicity. The PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY will be curious to learn how far the trade generally agrees with it in its estimate of the unusual excellence of this book, and how far the public shows its agreement by buying it. It should be noted that the author—who has been pseudonymous—is now known to be Colonel Swinton, the "Official Eye-Witness" with the British army in France: he knows whereof he writes.

OUR valued associate, William A. Stewart, Advertising Manager of THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, completes on November 30th his fortieth year of continuous service in this office, and we know that his many friends throughout the publishing trade gladly join with his immediate associates in congratulations to him. Mr. Stewart entered the employ of Frederick Leypoldt almost at the beginning of Mr. Leypoldt's establishment of this journal and rose from one position to another until he took charge of the advertising relations of THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, which position he has held for so many years, throughout which his good nature, ready humor and pleasant tact have won him so many friends among those with whom he has come into business touch. The qualities which have won him friendship and success have been even more fully appreciated by those with whom he has come into close touch from day to day. When he reads this brief tribute as perhaps a pleasant surprise to him, we make bold to assure him that in it many will join whose individual voices may not reach him.

THE INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT UNIONS AND THE WAR.*

THE conflict which began in Europe, and even in Asia, in August brings up anew and urgently a problem of particular interest to authors on the one hand and, on the other, to inventors, proprietors of designs, models, and trade-marks, and, indeed, all business men who have to protect themselves against unfair competition. This problem, according to Le Droit d'Auteur, is as follows:

Shall it be accepted that all treaties, including those which have constituted the International Unions, are, so far as the belligerents are concerned, destroyed and annulled by the state of war? It has seemed worth while to us to reply to this important question—one which touches vast interests—by inquiring into the position of the International Unions. We need not concern ourselves with political or other similar treaties. We will even leave aside the question of commercial treaties, the status of which is very uncertain. In fact, these last have for their purpose the facilitation of transactions which war forcefully overthrows. Consequently, it is easy to understand the resulting suspension of acts relative to these same transactions. On the other hand, war very often has the effect of decidedly modifying the reciprocal relations between belligerents. It is hardly possible to accept, of course, the maintenance or reinforcing pure and simple of treaties made under conditions and for needs which perhaps no longer exist. But when it comes to another kind of treaty, the situation is entirely different, for the simple reason that the object of these treaties is different. In entering upon them, the idea is, in most cases, to undertake mutual management of more special interests than those concerned with commerce—indeed, to establish natural rights, so sacred that they must not be interfered with even by war itself. Hence, the agreements made have such strict legal issues that it would be truly unjust, still more useless at the end of the war, to sacrifice them.

This idea has already been accepted with regard to many specific treaties concluded between two countries only. Short of the complete annexation of one by the other, the states are eventually called upon to resume the normal relations of peace. Is it not too much to oblige them to reconstruct at that time the vast mass of agreements which in our day control international intercourse? Is it not still more unreasonable to open up between the warring nations during all the continuance of the strife a sort of legal void which uselessly and unreasonably sacrifices all the most legitimate and fixed private interests? To wish that would be to introduce into modern life an element of sheer barbarism. That is no longer possible to-day.

The unreasonable character of such a system becomes even more apparent when it is a question of the International Unions. Here it is no longer a proposition of two states, each one deciding the matter for itself. A more or less sizable group is formed to gain some common advantage. When a war breaks out certain of the members to the agreement remain neutral and follow the even tenor of their ways. The others become belligerents.

Are these warring members to consider themselves reciprocally freed from their agreements made in connections with the Unions and at the same time still joined to the neutral states? A singular situation would result, one entirely incompatible with the fundamental principle of the Unions. Isn't it clear that a country could not remain bound to a neutral yet separated from another member of the Union, likewise at war, which considers itself as equally bound to the neutral states? A member of a union is opposed to all the other members or else to none of them. There cannot be any middle ground, or else this paradoxical situation would result, that in a union of states primitive agreements would be roughly broken without regard to the customary warnings, and broken at that with certain members of the union and not with others. That is comprehensible in the case of a political union for military co-operation, for in that case the conflict bears directly on the act of agreement, and its purpose is to decide one way or the other the question involved in the agreement. But in the case of an agreement on a point of private right, involving no such position, it would be wrong and harmful to apply the same principles alike to the detriment of belligerents and neutrals.

A few examples will make this clearer. Thus, can it be admitted that war would legitimately permit the members of the Latin monetary union to break their monetary engagements and impose a sort of bankruptcy on their adversary? How could it be said that an armed conflict can put an end, either with one or with several contracting states, to the agreements arrived at in the metric convention? Do the rights to intellectual works and industrial property cease to be valid because war breaks out between two states? No, of course not; then, why should one cease to protect them, in the face of agreements which, though crippled in their application by the circumstances of the struggle, nevertheless remain unchanged in origin and nature, and which, moreover, in nowise interfere in their application with the necessities of attack and defense? One might reason along the same lines with regard to the agreements of those Unions which are concerned with civil right, sanitary measures, the post, telegraph, etc. It goes without saying that when the paramount necessity resulting from a state of war demands the suspension or even the breaking of treaties, one must inevitably give in to this irresistible pressure. When this is not the case it is best to respect these acts and apply them in the common interest of the parties concerned. In consequence, the fact should be firmly established that, in time of war, agreements of this sort should conserve their full validity and continue to be applied, in so far as possible. Otherwise the repercussion, already so cruel, of the state of war on private interests would be needlessly aggravated. The scholarly world is very generally favorable to the opinion which we have just advanced. It would be easy to cite a great many authors of all principal nationalities who have defended it in the most positive terms. But we prefer to employ a yet more telling argument, that of experience. During the course of the Spanish-American war, the Balkan wars, and the war between Italy and Turkey, the maintenance of the agreements of the Union has never been questioned. No belligerent state declared these acts void in their relation to any other nation. After the return of peace no particular steps had to be taken to put them once more into full effect. Throughout the world at large, if the application of these agreements had been hampered or even suspended, their actual existence had not been impaired, and everywhere the world took up their application once more, in so far as circumstances permitted, just as if their functioning had been momentarily interrupted by some natural phenomenon entirely outside the control of man.

There is no adequate reason why the same state of affairs should not hold in the present war. We have received, moreover, from several authorities in the various warring nations, statements proving that such is also their opinion. They had not for a single moment imagined that the agreements of the Union were in danger, and we have no reason to believe that the sentiment in the various countries of the Union will not back up this opinion.

Briefly to reiterate, then, we are firmly persuaded that even in the midst of the cataclysm which is overturning Europe our Unions will maintain themselves as elements of peace and reparation, making the preservation of our previously acquired rights possible even in the midst of the conflict.

A LONDON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY.

A WINTER AVALANCH OF WAR BOOKS IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, November 7.

You may, perhaps, care to know what we have been doing in the way of war books, which have become a large and important branch of the winter book trade and are very interesting if only for that reason. They are also, however, interesting in a broader way, as showing how the active literature of a great country like England deals with a war on the scale of the present Armageddon. From the point of view of the English reader it is a double war; that is to say, a war by land and by water. Always, for some reason, the heart of England goes out most to its navy, to those who go down to the sea in ships and take great risks. We are first, foremost and all the time a sea-going people and, living on an island, a sea-going people we must always remain. Our navy lives very near to us, but we waken up also in our affections towards our army when a war like the present comes upon us. There is not a family in the whole land who has not somebody fighting on the Continent or fighting on the sea. Thus the interest of our navy and our army are very much intertwined on this occasion; but, even so, they have in a way a divided interest in literature—books about the sea fight and books about the land fight; and the people are buying both very largely. The three sensational subjects of the land and sea war are aeroplanes, submarines and spies. On each of those subjects there has been quite a shower of books, some of them of a popular kind, those meant to be read by the man in the street. For instance, a volume by the German spy, Dr. Graves, called "The Secrets of the German War Office," has simply romped through thousands and thousands of copies to a huge circulation. The patriotic side of the war has found its expression in poetry, new and old, of which there has been a great output. All the poets have been busy, and all the old poets who sing of the deeds of the days of long ago have been reprinted. Private Thomas Atkins, who is the plain British soldier, has found his slogan in a popular music-hall song called "Tipperary."

A NEW PICTURE OF A WELL-KNOWN UTICA, N. Y., TRADE LANDMARK.

Two new marching songs which have caught on with the public are "Your King and Country Need You," by M. Paul Reubens, the well-known musician, and "Fall In," by Mr. Harold Begbie, who has recently been on a visit to America. They have really had a very considerable influence on recruiting in England and in a way they were written for that purpose. Mrs. E. Nesbit, who writes such charming stories for young people, Mr. E. V. Lucas, and other people to no end, have compiled anthologies of verse. You may say, in fact, that England, notwithstanding all the boasts and threats of Germany, is singing herself through this war.

Her military and naval authorities, however, do not forget even the great German writers on naval and military subjects. We have had various reprints of Clausewitz, of von Moltke's book on the Franco-German War of 1870, and of Bernhardi. Scarcely a great military book of past times has gone without being reprinted, and even "The Souldier's Catechism" of Cromwell's time has emerged from its long obscurity as a small reprint. The politics and diplomacy of the war have called forth many books, among them a very able deliverance by the teachers of history at Oxford University on "Why We Are at War." Dr. E. J. Dillon, to take another instance, has given English readers a little volume entitled "A Scrap of Paper." The book of this kind, however, which has had largest circulation, is a penny issue of the diplomatic correspondence which took place between England and the other belligerent countries before the war. On the law and custom of war we have had many deliverances, as, for instance, James Bryce's essay on "The Place of Neutrals." Of new strictly military works there is an endless procession as, to take a single case, a pamphlet on "Quick Training for War," by General Baden-Powell, the founder of the great Boy Scout movement. Reference books to the war, Who's Who's and What's What's and things like that, are simply endless, but the market for them is getting rather exhausted.

Books of actuality from the war are also coming out, a few by war correspondents, who, notwithstanding the severe censorship, have seen something of the campaign. A volume which is likely to stand out in this particular department is called "The War Stories of Private Thomas Atkins," and it consists of a selection, very carefully made, of the wonderful letters written from the front by the plain soldier—dispatches these of fine humanity, quiet heroism and endless humor.

What might be called the side departments of the war are also producing books. Nursing on the field has given us several volumes, more particularly one by the Dowager-Duchess of Sutherland, describing her experiences in Belgium. The war atmosphere, too, is finding its way into the stories of young people which we are promised at Christmas. A few new novels with the war in them have even already been turned out by writers who have an eye on circulation rather than on literary genius.

It will be seen, from what has been said, that the atmosphere of Armageddon has gone very largely into current English literature, and, indeed, this is likely to be an important factor for a long time. The coming of the war has completely changed many of the snippet papers which appeared from week to week in England. They had instantly to give up piping subjects of peace and turn to war, or go under. Some have gone under, others are making a struggling living, but, generally speaking, the effect of the war upon the snippet paper has been pretty disastrous. One wonders, without trying to answer the question, whether that is a benefit or not a benefit.

JAMES MILNE.

MACY SUED BY VICTOR COMPANY FOR PRICE CUTTING.

FOR some time past R. H. Macy & Company, the New York department store, has been advertising cut prices on Victor talking machines and records. On Nov. 19th suit was filed in the United States District Court at New York, by the Victor Talking Machine Company against "Jesse I. Straus, Percy S. Straus, and Herbert N. Straus, individually and jointly and as co-partners trading as R. H. Macy & Co." It is alleged by the Victor Company that the Macy stores' price-cutting is in violation of the provisions of the agreements by which the goods are licensed under the Victor Company's patents. The Victor Company asks for an injunction restraining Macy from selling its goods, or offering them for sale, at less than the prices named in the license agreements, and for an accounting and damages.

The following letter has been sent to Victor distributors and dealers:

Nov. 21, 1914.

Replying to the recent inquiry from you and others of our specially licensed distributors and dealers, concerning the acts of R. H. Macy & Co., of New York City, in violating the conditions of the license under which our Victor machines and Victor sound records are marketed, we beg to inform you that we have begun legal proceedings against R. H. Macy & Co. to enforce the license restrictions under which they obtained our patented goods, and we are confident of prevailing.

This action is in full accord with our established policy of protecting you and all others of our regularly licensed distributors and dealers in the legitimate marketing of our patented goods as stated in our special license contract with you.

We take this opportunity of reiterating our fixed policy of enforcing our patents, and of promptly seeking legal redress against all persons who infringe them or who violate the special license thereunder issued by us with each of our machines and records.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE COMPANY.
Louis F. Geissler,
General Manager.

The federal courts have presented in the last three years an almost unbroken record of decisions adverse to net prices. The Victor Talking Machine Company, after the decision in one of the most significant of these, the Sanatogen case, adopted a new form of license agreement whereby it granted only the possession and the use of its machines and records under certain specified conditions. The Victor Company alleges that now none of its machines are really sold, that title to their goods, technically speaking, does not pass from the Victor Company. This test case against R. H. Macy & Company will be followed therefore with wide interest and especially by members of the book trade.

FEDERAL BANK RESERVE BOARD ISSUES RULES GOVERNING LOANS.

THE Federal Reserve Board has announced that both single-name and double-name paper shall be admitted to rediscount with the Federal Reserve banks.

BASIC PRINCIPLES PRESCRIBED.

In announcing its decision, the Federal Reserve Board prescribed the following basic principles for the guidance of the Federal Reserve banks and member banks:

"(A) No bill shall be admitted to rediscount by Federal Reserve banks, the proceeds of which have been or are to be applied to permanent investment; and regulation number two has been formulated with the intention of giving effect to this principle, and is herewith inclosed.

"(B) Maturities of discounted bills should be well distributed. It is the well established practice of European reserve banks to invest only in obligations maturing within a short time. It is a general rule not to purchase paper having more than ninety days to run. The maturities of these notes and bills are so well distributed as to enable those banks within a short time to strengthen their hold on the general money market by collecting at maturity or by reinvesting at a higher rate a very substantial proportion of their assets. Acting on this principle the federal reserve banks should be in a postion to liquidate whenever such a course is necessary, substantially one-third of all their investments within a period of thirty days. Departure from this principle will endanger the safety of the system. It is observance of this principle that affords justification for permitting member banks to count balances with Federal Reserve banks as the equivalent of cash reserves.

SHOULD BE SELF-LIQUIDATING.

"(C) Bills should be essentially self-liquidating.

"Safety requires not only that bills held by the Federal Reserve banks should be of short and well distributed maturities, but, in addition, should be of such character that it is reasonably certain that they can be collected when they mature. They ought to be essentially 'self-liquidating,', or, in other words, should represent in every case some distinct step or stage in the productive or distributive process—the progression of goods from producer to consumer. The more nearly these steps approach the final consumer the smaller will be the amount involved in each transaction as represented by the bill, and the more automatically self-liquidating will be its character.

CARE IS NECESSARY.

"Double-name paper drawn on a purchaser against an actual sale of goods affords, from the economic point of view, prima facie evidence of the character of the transaction from which it arose. Single-name notes, now so freely used in the United States, may represent the same kind of transactions as those bearing two names. Inasmuch, however, as the single-name paper does not show on its face the character of the transaction out of which it arose—an admitted weakness of this form of paper—it is incumbent upon each Federal Reserve Bank to insist that the character of the business and the general status of the concern supplying such paper should be carefully examined in order that the discounting bank may be certain that no such single-name paper has been issued for purposes excluded by the act, such as investments of a permanent or speculative nature. Only careful inquiry on these points will render it safe and proper for a Federal Reserve bank to consider such paper a 'self-liquidating' investment at maturity."

COPYRIGHT NOTES.

FRENCH CASE INVOLVING UNFAIR USE OF RIVAL GUIDE BOOK.

IN April of this year a rather bald case of piracy, involving the question of the originality of similar works drawn from facts in the public domain and the validity of an author's rights in the event of the non-deposit of his work, was tried before the French Trib. de commerce de la Seine, Audience du 6 avril, 1914. The evidence in the case was, according to a recent number of Le Droit d'Auteur, briefly as follows:

Both the Societé Michelin et Cie, the plaintiff, and the Societé Continental, the defendant, have published an automobile guide for several years past. Although both aimed at the same goal, i. e., the description of itineraries and the presentation of general facts concerning the districts covered, and while both drew their facts from material in the public domain, it was evident that in the matters of the assemblage and arrangement of the data, there was every opportunity for the works to vary according to the esprit of the editor.

In fact, the Michelin guide, with its material divided into three sections, was at the outset distinctly different from the Continental guide. During the last ten years, however, both books have been constantly improved; but whereas the plaintiff's guide book has maintained its same general form, that of the defendant has continually approached more and more the style of its rival. A legal seizure by the Societé Michelin in 1913 revealed that the Societé Continental had not hesitated to copy its rival in its essential features, titles, divisions, and even certain passages word for word; pages from the Michelin guide book were found posted in with the copy sent to the printer by the Societé Continental. The defendant pleaded that it had made licit plagiarism of a 1909 guide which had not been properly deposited. It was held, however, that the neglect of legal deposit does not constitute on the author's part abandonment of ownership. It was also proved that the editions of 1910, 1911 and 1912 had also been copied.

The judgment rendered by the court was confiscation of the Societé Continental's guide book and an indemnity of 10,000 francs to Michelin et Cie.

AMERICAN BOOK REFUSED PROTECTION IN SPAIN FOR LACK OF DATE IN NOTICE

Le Droit d'Auteur notes a copyright case of some interest to American authors and publishers. In April of this year copyright was applied for in Barcelona on two books by Orison Swett Marden, "The Progressive Business Man" and "Pushing to the Front," the former bearing the copyright notice "Copyright 1913 by Orison Swett Marden" and the latter, "Orison Swett Marden, all rights reserved." Under the reciprocal copyright agreement re-established between Spain and the United States in 1902, an American book can be copyrighted in Spain providing application is made within one year of date of publication. Since the second of the two books bore no date of copyright the Copyright Bureau, in some uncertainty, referred the matter for advice. Subsequently the book bearing the notice, "Orison Swett Marden, all rights reserved," was refused copyright protection. A portion of the official decision reads: "'Pushing to the Front' is refused copyright since it does not contain the mention [of date] which the United States law of May 9, 1906,* requires. In the future no work of an American subject will be admitted if it does not bear the aforementioned date."

ITALIAN SENAT RATIFIES REVISED CONVENTION OF BERNE.

On June 20th the Italian Sénat voted in favor of the ratification of the revised Convention of Berne of 1908, which the Chambre had already endorsed on February 20th. According to Le Droit d'Auteur, in the discussion which preceded the vote, an amendment to Article 4 of the Convention was offered, proposing that publication be required of the complete score of a dramatico-musical work in the form of its ultimate presentation rather than allowing the deposit of the mere piano score, the rest of the score remaining unpublished. The author of this amendment, Senator San Martino, urged that Italy's ratification of the Convention be conditioned upon the adoption of the amendment by the other countries. However, when M. Cavasola, Minister of Agriculture, Industry and Commerce, pointed out that Article 4 is in reality favorable to the interests of Italian authors and that the exceptance of the terms of the Convention does not prevent Italy from modifying her own copyright law in line with Senator San Martino's suggestion, the amendment was withdrawn.

Senator Cocchia objected to the two reservations of the Berne Convention touching translation and the restraint of the presentation of translations which he deemed "little in harmony with the truly remarkable progress of Italian letters." However, this objection, also, was withdrawn and the subsequent vote was overwhelmingly in favor of the ratification.

USE OF PHOTOGRAPH FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES.

Another case, involving copyright in a photograph used for advertising purposes, is recorded in The Author. The plaintiff was Miss Jane Wood, a professional actress, and the defendants were Eugen Sandow, Sandow's Ltd., and the Dover Street Studios, Ltd. The plaintiff alleged that, without her consent the defendants had reproduced her portrait as part of an advertisement of Sandow corsets, and she claimed damages for infringement of copyright and for libel. The portrait was reproduced from a photograph taken by the Dover Street Studios, and the advertisement appeared in the Daily Mail and other halfpenny dailies. The plaintiff alleged that the use of her photograph in connection with an advertisement of this kind was injurious to her character and reputation as an actress. She alleged that, as she did not in fact wear Sandow's corsets, she was held out as being a party to deceiving the public, and that she was represented as being willing for payment to allow her portrait to be used as an advertisement of underclothing.

The plaintiff's claim to copyright in the photograph turned on section 5 (1) (a) of the Copyright Act, 1911, which provides that where the negative of a photograph is ordered by some other person (i. e., some person other than the author) and is made for valuable consideration in pursuance of that order, then, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the person by whom the negative was ordered shall be the first owner of the copyright. The plaintiff contended that she went to the studio as an ordinary paying customer, whereas the photographer contended that the plaintiff was given a complimentary sitting with the view of getting her photograph into the illustrated papers during the run of a play at the Coliseum in which she was taking part. It was proved that the plaintiff came to the studio with a letter of introduction from a mutual friend, and that she expressed her desire to have her photograph reproduced in the Sketch or Tatler. Nothing was said about copies for her own use or as to what price the photographer charged for copies, and no charge was made against her in the photographer's book. The plaintiff was photographed in four positions and the photographer sent a finished copy of each position to the plaintiff. He sent copies round to the illustrated Press, but none of the papers inserted the plaintiff's photograph. About six weeks after she had been photographed the plaintiff called at the studio and ordered six copies of one particular position. She asked the price and was charged £1 8s. being £2 2s. less 33½ per cent. discount. Mr. Justice Scrutton, in summing up, said that it was clear on the one hand that an ordinary paying customer acquired the copyright in his photograph, and, on the other hand, that when a photographer invited some celebrated person to come and be photographed for publicity purposes the copyright in the photograph belonged to the photographer. This was a case which came between these two. It was a question of fact for the jury whether the negative was ordered by the plaintiff and made for valuable consideration in pursuance of that order. A good test was to consider whether, if after the sitting the plaintiff had declined to take any copies or to pay for the sitting, she could have been successfully sued by the photographer, or whether it would not have been a good answer to such a claim for her to allege that there was no express or implied promise by her to make any payment to the photographer. The jury found that the negative was not ordered by the plaintiff and made for valuable consideration in pursuance of that order, and the plaintiff therefore, failed in her claim of copyright.

On the plaintiff's claim for libel it was proved that she had expressed to the photographer her willingness to do "fashion work," i.e., to sit for advertisers who would fit on her the garments they desired to advertise and then reproduce her photograph as an advertisement. Sandow's Ltd. had applied to the Dover Street Studios for photographs of ladies to advertise their corsets. The Dover Street Studios sent them a selection of photographs of ladies who had consented to do fashion work and Sandow's Ltd. chose the plaintiff's photograph and wrote to the Dover Street Studios that they had done so and would be glad if the Dover Street Studios would make an appointment on a date as early as possible for Miss Wood to be fitted with corsets. The next day the Dover Street Studios sent to Sandow's Ltd. an invoice: "To right to reproduce the photograph of Miss Jane Wood as an advertisement, £4 4s." Four days afterwards the advertisement complained of appeared, although the plaintiff had not been communicated with and was entirely ignorant of the proposal to use her photograph in connection with an advertisement of corsets. Evidence was given to the effect that it was very common for actresses to permit their photographs to be used for advertising purposes, and the jury found that the publication of the plaintiff's photograph in connection with the advertisement was not injurious to her character or reputation.

The plaintiff's claim, therefore, failed on both copyright and libel. The case illustrates the danger of giving sittings to a photographer for any purpose other than the supply of copies for payment to be made by the sitter. Even where a free sitting is given for an express purpose, such as the insertion of the sitter's photograph in a particular paper, the copyright vests in the photographer and there is no limitation to his right to reproduce it or authorize its reproduction. The sitter has no legal remedy except when the manner of reproduction is such as to be injurious to his character or reputation.

BOOK TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION OF PHILADELPHIA

The Philadelphia Booksellers' Association met at the Franklin Inn Club on the evening of November 20th. The speaker of the evening was Mr. Algot Lange, the celebrated South American explorer, who has just returned from a new extended trip of exploration of the Amazon. His talk was illustrated with a series of interesting views of "darkest America."

PITTSBURGH BOOKSELLERS' AND STATIONERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Pittsburgh Booksellers' and Stationers' Association will hold its annual banquet, as usual, on the last Tuesday evening in January. This early notice is given so there need be no conflicting dates made by other associations.

All travelling salesmen in the stationery and book trade are invited. Tickets may be procured in due time from the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Charles H. Langbein, at $3 per plate.

At the annual meeting the following officers of the association were elected: Robert Crawford, president; Elmer McKown, first vice-president; A. W. McCloy, second vice-president; C. H. Langbein, treasurer; Christian Kirsch, recording secretary, and Charles H. Clough, corresponding secretary.

NEW YORK BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE

On November 18th the New York Booksellers' League held its second dinner of the winter at its usual rendezvous, the Hotel Brevoort. The speakers of the evening were Robert W. Neeser, author of "Our Many Sided Navy," and Burges Johnson, the perpetrator of the "Bashful Ballads" and other "Beastly Rhymes." Mr. Neeser's talk, illustrated by many unusually interesting stereopticon slides, presented a realistic picture of the everyday life of "those that go down to the sea in ships" —of war. Mr. Johnson in his short talk spoke of the relativeness of all humor, how the Yankee joke may not appeal to the Texan as funny because it may not furnish to him the necessary element of surprise; likewise, the Englishman is not devoid of a sense of humor—he just doesn't appreciate our sort of joke.

The following had been elected to membership in the League since the October meeting: Philip Bardes and A. W. Baum, of the Baker & Taylor Co., W. F. Collins, of Saalfield Publishing Co., Ernest Gee, of Brentano's; P. C. Hemstreet, of Montgomery Ward & Co.; Harry F. Peto, of E. P. Dutton & Co.; Archie F. Reeve, of C. S. Hammond & Co.; Eric Schuler, of Authors' League; William Shields, of The Baker & Taylor Co.

A tribute was paid to the memory of Frederick E. Hafeley whose death had occurred since the last meeting, the members standing in silence for a moment as a last token of respect to a friend and supporter of the League since its foundation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

LEIPZIG BOOK EXHIBIT NOT RUINED.

Leipzig, October, 1914.

Editor The Publishers' Weekly:

You are perfectly right in saying in The Publishers' Weekly, number of September the 5th, that the rumor that the English, French and Russian pavilions at the Leipzig Graphic Exhibit were burned or destroyed is utterly unfounded. The three named pavilions remain entirely in the same state that they were erected and untouched by the people of Germany in every respect. Some of the Italian and other newspapers and especially some news agencies like Reuter, Agence Havas, etc., are paid by the English, Russian, French and Belgians to send over the world and especially to your great country a pack of lies to destroy the good name of Germany in the eyes of neutral powers.

I hope that our American friends will by this time already know how matters stand not only with the Leipzig Exhibit but with the war generally, and that especially the English and Russians are the instigators of this terrible war against Germany that did not dream of making war against anybody.

The representative (at the present time) of the American Libraries Exhibit, Miss Adelaide Hasse, who is still at her post in the American section is in the position to testify everything.

Yours very respectfully,
KARL W. HIERSEMANN.

INSUFFICIENT POSTAGE TO AUSTRALIA.

Melbourne, Oct. 1, 1914.

Editor The Publishers' Weekly:

It is almost impossible to persuade publishers in your territory, apart from the leading concerns in New York and Boston, to carry out instructions regarding the mailing of samples on small lots of books required urgently.

Specific instructions are given in every case to mail such lines by Book Post, NOT parcel post, but in nine cases out of ten the books are sent per parcel post. Now not only are parcels sent in this way longer in transit, but the cost of mailing by the publishers is at least 50 per cent. more than by book post, and there is still a charge at this end before the parcel can be obtained.

The Postal Authorities on your side have time and again advised publishers that the full charge for parcel post is made at your end, but this is not so. I have before me a specific instance. A sample book received from Peoria cost 24 cents by parcel post—still subject to 12 cents further charge—because it was sent per parcel post, while the full charge per book post would have been 12 cents.

One of our postal authorities "More to pay labels" is attached to this letter. In this instance the publisher elected, through carelessness or laziness, to send three books in one parcel per parcel rate instead of making three parcels per book rate. The result was that the cost of mailing per parcel rate was quite 50 per cent. in excess of the book rate and I had still to pay 54 cents at this end.

It will not be out of place to also mention the quite common practice in your territory of insufficiently stamping Australian correspondence and every mail brings its charge from the postal authorities of $1.00 or more to cover the deficiency and fines.

Will you assist in this matter by publishing the foregoing?

Yours truly,
AN AUSTRALIAN SUBSCRIBER.

OBITUARY NOTES.

LEONARD EDWARD REIBOLD, for many years assistant general manager of the American Book Company, died in New York City on Nov. 23 in his fifty-eighth year. Previous to the formation of the American Book Company, he was with A. S. Barnes & Co. of Chicago. Mr. Reibold was in charge of the foreign business of his company, and held the position of adviser to the leading educators of the United States and the Philippine and Cuban Governments in the purchase of books for educational purposes. His wife survives him.

THE BOOK TRADE is paying its share of the grim toll exacted from the "far flung battle lines" in Belgium and France. Close upon the notice of the sad death of Jean Terquem, the young French bookseller who died on the field of battle, "foeward as fits the man," but a day after his promotion to a captaincy, comes word of the death, from wounds received at the battle of the Somme, of M. Pierre Rogers, director of the publishing house of Pierre Rogers et Cie., Paris. From England we learn of the loss of Lieutenant Frederick Longman of the Royal Fusiliers, "who has given his life in defense of the British Empire."

PERIODICAL NOTES.

GEORGE B. SPENCER, formerly associated with the Outlook, has become business manager of Good Health, a vegetarian magazine published at Battle Creek, Mich.

COMMENCING with the January issue the name of Popular Electricity and Modern Mechanics Magazine will be changed to Modern Mechanics.

Outdoor Advertising is the title of a new magazine published at Utica, N. Y., in a convenient pocket size edition, with embossed covers and a generally attractive appearance.

THE SEPTEMBER "WAR MANUAL" of the World's Work has gone into a seventh printing, total sales aggregating 300,000 copies. Including the December World's Work which will be another "War Manual," total sales for the three "Manuals" will reach close to the million mark. The December "Manual" which deals with American trade opportunities will also be published in Spanish for the South American countries.

CREDITORS of Success Magazine will recover about one per cent. of their claims against the Success Publishing Company. The total claims against the company, the referee has reported to the Supreme Court, amounted to $440,253, of which the largest individual claim was $136,232. The assets sold for $5,515, from which legal expenses were deducted, leaving $4,354 for distribution. The company also had a bond issue of $320,000.

THE Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia has secured judgment by consent against the Canadian Woman's Magazine Publishing Company, limited, of Toronto. The judgment restrains the defendants who carry on business in Toronto, from printing or distributing any magazine or periodical under any name in which the word "Ladies'" is in any way conjoined with the words "Home Journal," or either of them. The defendants are to take steps at once to cancel the registration at Ottawa of the name "Canadian Ladies' Home Journal," which it was complained infringed on the plaintiff's business. It was alleged that this name would deceive people into the belief that it was the Canadian issue of a Philadelphia magazine. The case was determined on the old common law, not under copyright law, as there is no copyright of a magazine title.

PERSONAL NOTES.

MISS BELLE C. MORRIS is now with M. Goldenberg & Co., Washington, D. C., as assistant in the book and stationary department.

HENRY SYDNOR HARRISON, author of "Queed" and "V. V.'s Eyes," has been elected a member of the American Institute of Arts and Letters.

MRS. BESSIE VAN VORST, American author, and Hughes Le Roux, an Officer of the Legion of Honor and one of the editors of the Matin, were married in Paris on Nov. 26 at the Church of Ste. Clothilde. M. T. Herrick, the American Ambassador; Etienne Lamy, member of the Academy; Mgr. Batiffol; and Marie Van Vorst were the witnesses of the ceremony. Mrs. Van Vorst, who has lived in Paris for some time, is the author of "The Cry of the Children," "Letters to Women in Love," and other books.

A TESTIMONIAL dinner was tendered by the employees of Henry Malkan, of New York, to Mr. Frank R. Thoms on November 14th, to mark the entering of Mr. Thoms into another phase of his long career as a bookseller, being the first public appearance of the new bookselling firm of Thoms & Eron. With Mr. Charles Nelson as toast-master the dinner swung into a spirit of cheer and good-fellowship, interpolated with speeches full of good wishes to the guest of honor. Later in the evening when reminiscences were in order no one attending could help but be glad that he was associated with such a business as bookselling. This optimistic note was the keynote of the gathering. As a tangible token of their appreciation of Mr. Thoms during the time of his service with them, his fellow employees presented him with a handsome umbrella cane.

THE APPRAISAL of the estate of Joseph J. Little, president of J. J. Little & Ives Company, bookbinders, was made public last week. Mr. Little's gross estate was valued at $649,507 and his net estate at $537,830. Mr. Little owned real estate worth $256,723 and securities valued at $189,447, which included $23,000 in bonds of his printing company and 465 shares of stock worth $11 a share. He held $163,826 of his company's notes. His wife, Josephine Little, received $167,524, and $128,608 went to his son, Arthur W. Little, president of the Pearson company and of the J. J. Little & Ives Company. Mr. Little owned 1,068 shares of preferred stock of the Pearson company, publishers of Pearson's Magazine, of a par value of $10,680, and 29,120 shares of common stock, par value $291,200. Both stocks were pronounced worthless. The appraisal was based on the reports of the publishing company for the three years prior to Mr. Little's death, which occurred February 11, 1913. In 1910 the cost of producing the magazine was $248,474, of which $144,082 was the cost of the editorial work. The sales amounted to $118,845, and the loss for the year was $44,631. In 1911 the cost of production of the magazine was reduced to $207,056, and the editorial outlay was only $113,162, with sales of $143,925, resulting in a profit of $1,333. The next year the cost of production dropped to $139,535, and the editorial cost was $94,663, but the sales dropped to $122,208, and with a heavy decrease in advertising receipts there was a loss of $27,169.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO. announce the fourteenth printing of Prof. Roland G. Usher's "Pan-Germanism."

AMONG RECENT PUBLICATIONS by George W. Jacobs & Co., are "The Son of Timeus," a Biblical story, and "Shear Nonsense," a collection of mirth-provoking stories similar to the earlier volumes, "That Reminds Me," and "That Reminds Me Again."

ON NOVEMBER 25TH The Macmillan Co. published "A Wanderer in Venice," another of E. V. Lucas' delightful "Wanderer" books, and "Makers of Madness," a peace play dealing with Germany and the United States, by Hermann Hagedorn, author of "Faces in the Dawn."

"GERMANY AND ENGLAND," published by Edw. J. Clode, is a series of articles from the pen of Robert Blatchford, author of "Merrie England" and one of England's leading Socialists, urging England to prepare herself for the coming struggle against Germany. The articles appeared four years ago in the London Daily Mail.

A RATHER NOVEL juvenile is "The Stickum Stamp Family and Other Stamp Stunts," published by Barse & Hopkins. Its idea is based upon the wellnigh universal childish propensity for cutting things out and pasting them in books—only the victims of the shears and paste pot in this case are stamps.

JESSE LYNCH WILLIAMS' play, "And So They Were Married,"—just published by Scribner—is a comedy of the new woman, dealing with such modern marital problems as: Must the wife play while the husband works? Is a partnership of work antagonistic to happy marriage? What's wrong with marriage anyway?

THE THOMAS Y. CROWELL CO. has published "The Man Napoleon," a biography of the "biggest little soldier of modern times," by William Henry Hudson, staff-lecturer in literature to the University Extension Board of the University of London. The book is illustrated with sixteen full page illustrations in color.

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & CO. published recently a new illustrated edition of Gene Stratton-Porter's popular story "Freckles." The illustrations are by Thomas Fogarty. Another book from the same house is the new edition of "Fairy Tales from Hans Christian Andersen" with its weirdly imaginative illustrations by Dugald Stewart Walker.

THE GEORGE H. DORAN CO. has just published "The Forest Ring," an unusually attractive juvenile, by William C. de Mille, author of "Strongheart" and other plays. The story is a fairy fantasy of the "Princess Moss Bud," how she learned the secrets of woodcraft and earned the love of the forest beasts. Illustrations and end-papers are by Harold Sichel.

BOSTON is one of the few American cities in which that delightful yet rather un-American quality of "quaintness" still lingers. In his "Rambles Around Old Boston," published by Little, Brown & Co., Edwin M. Bacon describes many of the odd old nooks and corners that still linger in Boston. Another Little, Brown publication is the Tenth Edition, revised and enlarged, of that reliable old vade mecum "Bartlett's Familiar Quotations."

HENRY HOLT AND COMPANY published on November 21st Heath Robinson's illustrated edition of "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; "Musicians of To-day," by Romain Rolland; "Radisson: the Voyageur," a verse drama concerning the French explorer to whose work the founding of the present city of St. Paul is largely due; and a fifth book by J. A. Thompson, "The Wonder of Life," which deals with certain interesting problems in natural history.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S CIRCULATING LIBRARY in England is pushing a war-time bookselling campaign having as its slogan, "A Welcome Gift. Books for our Troops and the Wounded." They offer parcels of novels and more serious books at special lump prices varying from $2.50 for twenty novels to $25 for two hundred and twenty novels. Magazines are offered in packets of twelve for two shillings and quarterlies and reviews "suitable for officers" in bundles of twelve for five shillings.

A GLORIOUS COMPANY of bookworms, and bibliophilists is summoned by Percy Fitzgerald for our inspection in his "Book Fancier," (J. B. Lippincott). There is Southey, rummaging a bookstall while the coach he is to take is upon the point of starting; Macaulay, buried in cobwebby corners, bun in hand to save wasting time on luncheon; Gladstone, and the gentle Elia, whose volumes were the prizes of Gladstone's quest; these, and a goodly company more. The general aim of the book is to set forth in an attractive and fascinating manner "all the bibliophile wishes to know."

"ABROAD AT HOME" was published by the Century Co. on Nov. 20th. The jacket of the book depicts America, old and young, standing off peering at itself on the map. That's the book. Julian Street and Wallace Morgan jogged across the country, taking in Buffalo, Detroit, Kalamazoo and a score of other cities, seeing the sights, big and little, and the present volume, containing considerably more material than appeared originally in Colliers' Weekly, is their impression of America "as she is." It's the sort of book that ought to appeal to the man who is tired of reading about that great American institution, the "tired business man."

THE PUBLIC CONCERN over the spread of the "foot and mouth" disease which has caused the quarantining of New York, Maryland, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin has created a ready-made sales field for certain books bearing on the problem as it presents itself to the stock owner and to the meat consumer. In the rural community "Wagner's Standard Horse and Stock Book" (Saalfield) which describes the disease, its symptoms, treatment and remedies, should appeal to every stock owner, while the frightened city house-wife will probably be interested in such books as "Meatless Cookery" (Dutton).

Fenollosa, Mary McNeill, [Mrs. Ernest F. Fenollosa, "Sidney McCall," pseud.] The strange woman; adapted from W: J. Hurlbut's play of the same name. N. Y., Dodd, Mead. c. 381 p. col. front. D. $1.30 n.

After some years abroad as a student, the town's most promising young man comes back. He brings with him his future wife, young, beautiful, witty, but who, from the point of view of the townspeople, is a mystery. There are inevitable misunderstandings which lead to suspicions and grow dislikes. When it is known that she is a New Woman in the fullest, most modern meaning, there is a climax which threatens the peace of the town and of the young man and woman. The solution comes through the influence of the man's mother, who loves both him and the strange woman.

BOOK TRADE DIRECTORIES

The latest volume of the AMERICAN LIBRARY ANNUAL contains among other things four very useful directories for publishers and booksellers:

(1) Directory of 2500 Publishers
(2) Directory of 3200 Booksellers
(3) Directory of 3000 Public Libraries
(4) Directory of 1950 Private Book Collectors

The last mentioned directory is especially interesting. Last year's list of Private Book Collectors has been extended and corrected to the extent of 408 new names, and other changes. If you have used the earlier list with success, it will be well worth while ordering the latest volume, as the addition of more than 400 good new names to your mailing list is by no means unimportant.

Only a limited number of copies are offered for sale. Price, $5.00.
